

The Australasian Furnishing Research & Development Institute - trading as Furntech - is a not-for-profit, independent, technical organisation serving the interests of buyers and sellers of furnishings in Australia, New Zealand and beyond. Membership of the Institute is open to most interested persons or organisations within Australia or overseas, reflecting the Institute's increasing reach into other countries.

AFRDI is owned and run by its members.

Why you should belong to AFRDI

For the Industry

- Furntech-AFRDI exists to raise the standard in the manufacture of furniture, reflecting changing social expectations for quality, the evolving understanding of sustainability through better design for whole of life product performance including recycling, and environmentally responsible manufacturing.
- Furntech-AFRDI works in close co-operation with industry bodies through independent professional testing and credible product certification, accessing technologies from within Australia and overseas.
- Furntech-AFRDI's testing and certification gives those who sell quality furniture a point of differentiation in a market where many products may outwardly appear to be much the same. Furniture displaying the Furntech-AFRDI logos and certification marks carries a pedigree. This pedigree is further expanded with the addition of AFRDI Green Tick product certification, utilising AFRDI Standard 150, covering the sustainable manufacture of commercial furniture. AFRDI standards 142 and 151 – the AFRDI Rated Load standards for heavy people covering height adjustable and fixed height chairs – recognize the rapid changes in human sizing over the past four decades.

For the Member

- Access to information about standards and testing developments, particularly important during a period of rapid change to meet heightened environmental expectations and the accompanying need for greater durability.
- 'One-stop-shop' for advice on furniture standards.
- Testing and research facilities which can play an important part in product liability risk management. AFRDI is a Registered Research Agency (RRA) which can carry out development work for members while attracting for them a tax rebate under the Australian government's Research and Development support program.
- Competitive advantage through product testing and certification.
