Pull Up

Oil and wax Pull Up leathers exhibit a natural grain surface which may or may not be modified by the use of pigment. The grain surface has no continuous surface film and develops a characteristic pull-up effect on stretching, as the oils and waxes migrate away from the surface to produce a lighter tone.

Pull Up leathers change visually with time and usage. The absence of a pigment coat makes this type of leather susceptible to fading when exposed to daylight. Although easily scratched, scratch marks can often be rubbed away by hand to reduce the visual effect. Liquid spills must be blotted away immediately when they occur to prevent staining.

Modified Pull Up leather displays many of these characteristics, but includes a light surface pigment system and sealer coat which effectively blocks the oil from migrating through the surface of the leather and onto clothing.

If in any doubt, seek the services of a qualified leather technician or specialist for repair or treatment and always follow manufacturer recommendations regarding care.
